Observe will see Pukeahu National War Memorial Park turning green over the next six weeks as tree and garden plantings are completed.

The greening will be dramatic at the end of February when turf is laid for the lawns. The only area where grass will be seeded is the patch between the asphalt and plantings outside the Tasman Gardens Apartments.

The colour palette will be brightened further with red sandstone blocks which will be fitted all the way up the steel columns of the Australian War Memorial in the centre of the park from mid-February.

We have a busy programme through the next two months and are on track to complete the park in late March, ahead of schedule.

Invitation

Anzac Day in Wellington – 25 April 2015

This year in Wellington the dawn service for Anzac Day and the 11.00am National Anzac Day service are both being held at Pukeahu National War Memorial Park, between Taranaki and Tory Streets near the Basin Reserve.

Larger than usual crowds are expected for both services and organisation is well under way to cater for this situation. Further details will be available soon and will be posted in our project update.
What’s happening around the site

- Garden plantings turning the park green
