Alcohol interlock device

After you've got your alcohol interlock licence, you'll need to get an alcohol interlock device (AID) installed in your vehicle.

You'll pay an installation fee and a monthly lease fee to the installer. The provider/installer can tell you what the fees will be as they vary. To find a provider go to www.nzta.govt.nz/aid-provider

Make sure you're familiar with how your alcohol interlock works.

Drive with AID

The alcohol interlock will record vehicle use, alcohol readings and violations. This data will be uploaded to NZTA when you're applying to exit the programme.

You must only drive vehicles with approved alcohol interlocks installed.

Get approval to exit

When you've held your alcohol interlock licence for 12 months, you can apply for approval to exit the alcohol interlock programme.

We'll assess your last 6 months of data (or 3 months if you've done an approved drug and alcohol assessment). You must have driven a vehicle in this time so we can assess the data. We won't give you approval to exit if you:

- tampered with the alcohol interlock
- failed a breath test because of your breath alcohol level
- didn't do 2 or more rolling retests
- started or attempted to start the vehicle without an initial breath test
- missed 2 or more scheduled vehicle inspections or services.

Zero alcohol licence

Once NZTA gives you approval to exit the alcohol interlock programme, or if the court gives you a zero alcohol sentence, you'll need to get a zero alcohol licence.

While you hold this licence you have a zero alcohol limit. If you have even one drink and then drive, you can be charged with drink driving and disqualified.

You hold the zero alcohol licence for 3 years, and then it will expire. You can then apply to get a standard driver licence.

If you have an alcohol interlock installed, take your zero alcohol licence to the approved installer so they can remove the device from your vehicle.
